

The Royal College of Pathologists
Pathology: the science behind the cure

Skeleton

The adult human skeleton is made up of approximately 206 bones and provides support and protection for the body's organs.

Pathologists investigate disorders of the skeleton such as bone tumours or infections. The chemicals that make up the skeleton can be measured in the blood to investigate skeletal abnormalities.