

The Royal College of Pathologists
Pathology: the science behind the cure

X-ray

X-rays are performed by non-pathologists (radiologists or radiographers) but can help pathologists make a diagnosis.

X-rays show histopathologists the characteristics of bone tumours, help microbiologists see how an infection has affected the body and allow paediatric pathologists to identify bone deformities or injury in children.